MICHAEL CAMERON EXCHANGED A CAREER IN THE ROYAL NAVY FOR A FRANCHISE WITH OSCAR, THE PET FOOD HOME DELIVERY SPECIALIST

After serving for 30 years with the Royal Navy, Michael Cameron was not ready to stop work, so he decided to research how to become his own boss.

He explains: "Committing to the military services teaches you and your family how to cope with life together and apart - sometimes you miss out on the early years of parenthood, which puts a different perspective on how you plan your future in Civvy Street."

APPEAL

Michael adds: "Some of the skills I learnt can be easily adapted to the commercial world, but after years of strict daily routines a complete change of career appealed to me."

"The best way forward for me was having time to plan and think and then a casual meeting, when my wife Margaret was out walking our dog, introduced me to OSCAR."

He decided to invest in a franchise with the pet food home delivery specialist because it would allow him to work outdoors with dogs.

"An OSCAR business also allows me to work from home, which enables me to spend time with my family"

FREEDOM

"I enjoy the great outdoors, particularly walking, and dogs have been a big part of our lives over the years," Michael says.

"An OSCAR business also allows me to work from home, which enables me to spend time with my family, and gives me flexibility and freedom in my working day. To me, this was everything I had been searching for, so I invested in the local OSCAR resale business."

According to Michael, being his own boss gives him time for other things in life: "At the same time, I have a business that provides me with a good standard of living and a product and service that makes my customers happy and keeps their pets healthy." MM
